

Tell the Royal Commission about Aboriginal issues

24 July 2020

The Disability Royal Commission wants to know about First Nations people and

- violence
- abuse
- neglect
- exploitation

First Nations people are also called Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

First Nations people with disability can face more challenges than other people.

Challenges include:

- getting a good education
- getting good healthcare
- discrimination

Discrimination is when you treat someone badly because of something about them they cannot change.

The Royal Commission wants discrimination and abuse of First Nations people to end.

They want to know how to make things better.

They have questions you can answer.

The paper is available in Easy Read.

You can read the questions in Easy Read at www.disability.royalcommission.gov.au

You must answer the questions before September 11.

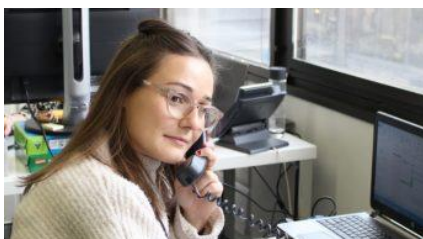

If you want to answer the questions you can call the Commission on 1800 517 199.

You may find it difficult to talk about abuse and discrimination.

You can get support before you talk to the Commission.

To find a support service call the Commission on 1800 517 199.

If you have any questions please call us on 1800 424 065.
